

This response was submitted to the consultation held by the Nuffield Council on Bioethics on the Forensic use of bioinformation: ethical issues between November 2006 to January 2007. The views expressed are solely those of the respondent(s) and not those of the Council.

Aiden Berry

I am a Forensic Science student at N.E.W.I in Wrexham and I am fully behind the Police's stance on keeping DNA on the NDNAD. If people have nothing to hide then why is there such an ethical problem with our Government wanting to make our nation a safer place. Everyone who is a citizen of Great Britain should be on the NDNAD as a matter of protecting our society from the people who go out of their way to try and infringe our civil liberties. Our nation has become a soft touch and is a breeding ground for criminals of all scales and the sooner that all people who want to enter our country and live here are put on this database the better. We should not be made feel like this is unethical by organisations which push more for the protection of the rights of criminals rather than the actual and potential victims